

Dr. Ruth Gottesman has served as a distinguished faculty member of the Albert Einstein College of Medicine for over 30 years. In addition, Dr. Gottesman was a founding director of the Fisher Landau Center for the Treatment of Learning Disabilities, a division of Einstein's Children's Evaluation and Rehabilitation Center established to provide interdisciplinary services to individuals of all ages. Her exemplary effort on behalf of those with learning disabilities has earned her the respect and admiration of colleagues and friends alike. In her career, she serves the most vulnerable in our society with the highest level of compassion and commitment.

Dr. Gottesman has balanced this distinguished career with an equally impressive family life. Married to David for 57 years, she has also been a loving mother to three children—Bob, Alice, and Bill—and grandmother to seven grandchildren—Ben, Sarah, Alan, Clara, Zachary, Eleanor, and Jessica. While she and her family share a passion for traveling and learning about other people and places, Dr. Gottesman remains committed to a variety of causes in her own community including various charitable organizations, schools, and museums.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to recognize my good friend Dr. Ruth Gottesman for an unparalleled career fighting for those who are unable to fight for themselves, and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring her tremendous accomplishments.

IN APPRECIATION OF THE LIFE AND WORK OF THE HILL'S JOSEPH CRAPA

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 31, 2007

Mr. RANGEL. Madam Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of a true patriot and committed public servant, the late Joseph Crapa. He boasted a litany of high posts and honors to his name, but it was as Chief of Staff to Senator CHARLES SCHUMER that he so ably served my native New York. Staffers like Mr. Crapa are the backbone of Capitol Hill, the too-often unsung movers and shakers who work feverishly on behalf of the American people.

Known as a fast-talking guy from Brooklyn, Mr. Crapa's magnetism drew a series of glowing compliments—solid, wise, shrewd. He loved politics and government, but remained loyal to his unwavering moral core. He was an intellectual powerhouse, relentless in his defense of the little guy, but with the practical political know-how to get things done. As the executive director of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, his last post, he agitated for a cause near and dear to his heart: the battle for religious freedom worldwide.

He is today—and always—remembered and appreciated as a man of conviction and a wealth of knowledge.

"SALT-OF-THE-EARTH" STAFFER CRAPA
MOURNED ON HILL

Joseph Crapa, the executive director of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, died Thursday from cancer at the age of 63.

Crapa, who had led the commission since 2002, previously worked for 25 years in various Capitol Hill-related jobs, including House committee offices, Member offices and in the Congressional relations shops of several executive branch agencies.

Immediately before coming to the commission, Crapa worked as chief of staff to Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.).

"Joe was a pure salt-of-the-earth human being," Schumer wrote in an e-mail. "To know him was to love him."

Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) noted in a statement that she knew Crapa during his service in the Senate and the Clinton administration. She lauded Crapa's "indomitable spirit and determination" during the fight to secure funding for New York in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

Crapa also served as counsel and staff director in the office of Rep. David Obey (D-Wis.) for 10 years, before leaving in 1997 to become associate administrator for congressional and intergovernmental affairs at the Environmental Protection Agency.

Obey said he was dubious when he first interviewed Crapa for a job in 1987.

"I thought, 'There's no way in God's green earth I can work with this fast-talking guy from Brooklyn,'" Obey said. "He was about three times as intense as I was. But his solidity, wisdom, and shrewdness came through, and we ended up not only working together for 10 years, but becoming close friends."

Obey said Crapa was a "superb example" of the importance of the role staffers play on the Hill.

"There are a lot of people who never serve in elected office—staffers and people in various agencies—who love this country, are dedicated to doing things right and to advancing the cause of regular people," Obey said. He said Crapa "loved politics, he loved government, he had a moral core to everything he did. He was an intellectual and, at the same time, a hard-nosed practicing pol in the best sense of the word."

In a statement released by USCIRF on Thursday, Chairman Michael Cromartie said Crapa "had an unwavering, principled commitment to . . . protecting religious freedom worldwide." He and Vice Chairwoman Preeta Bansal both commented on Crapa's "sharp political instincts," which Barisal said were "crucial to him in this sensitive area."

Over the course of his career, Crapa worked as the top congressional relations official at the EPA, the Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Agency for International Development, and in the No. 2 spot in the Department of Commerce's congressional relations office.

He also spent time at the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, where he was the executive director of the Speaker's Club, and as vice president at lobby shop Dutko and Associates. For 6 years during his time in Obey's office and at the EPA, Crapa taught part-time as adjunct professor of government at Georgetown University. He was a John C. Stennis Congressional fellow in 1995–1996.

Crapa was born Dec. 16, 1943, in Brooklyn, N.Y. He received his bachelor's degree from St. John's University in New York City and went on to receive a master's degree from Duke and a Ph.D. from the University of Arizona; all three degrees were in British and American literature. He married Barbara Vaskis in 1967; the couple had one son, Judd, and two grandsons, Sebastian and Baird.

A memorial service for Crapa is scheduled for 1 p.m. today at St. Peter's Church on Capitol Hill.

JAMES P. CHEEVER 100TH BIRTHDAY TRIBUTE

HON. KENDRICK B. MEEK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 31, 2007

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise to honor and congratulate James P. Cheever, who will be celebrating his 100th birthday on Sunday, November 4, 2007, at Tony Reception Palace, in Hialeah, FL. Many of his family, friends, and church friends will be in attendance to celebrate this momentous occasion. He was born on November 7, 1907, in Sylvania, Georgia. He is the middle child of six siblings, with one remaining sister, Ruby Cheever.

He was educated in the Sylvania school system. At the age of 22, he met and married Edna Mae Striggles. They were married on December 22, 1929. They shared 58 years of marriage until her death in 1987. Their union was blessed with four children, James P. Cheever, Jr., Henry Richmond Cheever, and Margie Beatrice Mayes. Their daughter Fronita Cheever, died at a very young age.

He has 10 grandchildren, Gregory Cheever, Gail Washington, Glenda Jameson, Anthony Cheever, Aundrea Mayes, Carey Cheever, LaEatrice McMurray, Laketia Cheever, Vincent Cheever and Tonya Linde. He has 25 great-grandchildren and 7 great-great grandchildren.

As many others did during the early 1900s, he earned a living by farming land in Georgia. Although farming provided a modest living, he and his wife wanted a better quality of life for their family. In November of 1947, he moved his family to Miami, Florida.

After arriving in Miami, he worked several odd jobs to support his family and he started working for a major construction firm, Benidick and Jordan Construction Company, in 1950. He was the only African-American man hired at that time to tie steel for the company and became the top man for the construction company.

In 1962, he left the construction field to work for the Dade County Public School system. During his employment with DCPS, he worked as Lead Custodian at Brownsville Junior High School and Carol City Elementary. He retired from DCPS in June of 1973. After retirement, he launched his own Lawn Service and was known by many for the meticulous lawn care he provided his customers.

James is a God-fearing man who dedicated his life to the Lord at a very young age. While living in Georgia he was a member of Lawton Grove Missionary Baptist Church. When he relocated to Miami, he moved his membership to New Hope Missionary Baptist Church in Liberty City, where he became a deacon on January 14, 1954, under the leadership of Rev. James E. Brown.

Several years later he moved his membership to become a founding member of Greater New Macedonia Missionary Baptist Church, located in Brownsville, under Pastor Rosco Jackson. He still attends services regularly and currently serves as the oldest deacon on the deacon board, under the leadership of Rev. Sherman Mungin.

James and his wife bought their first home in Florida, in what was known as Brownsville, in 1956. The property was acquired by the County, to build a public park, in 1969. They
